The collective labour agreement in Swiss Hospitality Industry (L-GAV)

The law provides for the possibility of the professional associations of employers and employees jointly defining industry-specific provisions on the conclusion, content and termination of individual employment relationships in a so-called collective labour agreement. In the L-GAV, the social partners regularly review the objectives of their social policy. This is because the agreement is intended to harmonise the changing demands that the market places on employers with the needs of employees for fair and modern social and working conditions.
